There are 2 sources of brush settings: Your Photoshop preferences: You can find them by going to the Adobe/PSD file > Preferences folder. Your system preferences: When you launch Photoshop, you'll see that it automatically saves its preferences file. This will be stored in your Adobe/PSD file > Preferences folder. * * * If you're not sure where to find all of these things, just launch Photoshop and look in the Preferences. Now let's look at some of the most popular brushes in the Adobe CS6 product. ## Brushes To edit and use brushes, Photoshop provides you with a palette that displays information about them. Figure 10.1 shows the Brushes palette. **Figure 10.1** : Using the brushes palette Some of the tools and settings you need are listed along the top of the Brushes palette. You can use the Brush Settings drop-down menu to change the brush that you're using. Figure 10.2 shows some of the most used brushes for working with images. **Figure 10.2** : Accessing and changing brush settings After you've accessed and loaded a brush, the Brush Options box appears (Figure 10.3) with an Edit Current command button, which you can click to access and customize the current brush setting. **Figure 10.3** : Using brushes ## Type Tools The Type Tools are used in creating various artistic effects. Figure 10.4 shows how to use these tools. They include the Eraser, the Spot Healing Brush, the Healing Brush, the Warp Tool, and the Brush Tool. **Figure 10.4** : Using type tools in Photoshop The Type Tools also provide the following type tools: * **Easel Filter:** Use the Easel Filter to create background images and select templates. * **Gradient Tool:** The Gradient Tool can be used to create and apply gradients, which are a great tool for highlighting or drawing attention to an image. Gradients can be made from a menu. * **Spot Healing Brush:** The Spot Healing Brush can be used to correct color and texture problems in an image and can even be used to fill in missing areas. * **Warp Tool:** The Warp Tool can be used to distort and stretch an image. You can also create and use type tools from the Palettes or Brushes tool

What's New in the?

Qualcomm picks up pace in China SAN JOSE, Calif. — Qualcomm is pulling ahead in the smartphone market in China, partly because it is the only player here who is a leader in both the processor and networking market, according to its chief executive. What's more, China's mobile companies are growing very fast. The device maker has 98.8 percent of the market share here, according to a report published this month. With the Qualcomm-Motorola deal, Samsung will be the only big vendor in China that doesn't have a processor partner. The deal marks a very significant milestone in Qualcomm's history. It first entered the mobile market in 1999 through a partnership with Motorola to supply chips for Motorola's first cellphone, the Motorola ROKR E1. Motorola went bankrupt in 2002, and was later acquired by Google. With the acquisition, Google will bring all of its devices to market with Qualcomm chips. This move puts Qualcomm in the position of the "third ecosystem," along with the Android system and Apple's iPhone system. The technology giant is slowly improving its position in China, but there's no doubt it faces a difficult road ahead. If it wants to win, it will have to overcome the inherent culture and business environment problems in China. "We are seeing huge growth in China. There is a huge smartphone market now. It's a big market," said Stephen McDowell, Qualcomm's chief executive. But the challenges are growing tougher. China is already the largest market for mobile devices worldwide, yet many of its smartphones are locked-down devices that have fewer and fewer apps and services available to them compared to Android. While there is a rapid growth in smartphones in the Chinese market, there are several ways for them to slow down. For one, China is a huge and diverse market. If the government will make that market more open and friendly to foreign businesses, the growth of smartphones may speed up. China's population of 1.3 billion — more than the rest of the world combined — means many smartphones with different types of operating systems may compete in the market. "The future of phones are really the markets in Asia, where you have a lot of new mobile carriers that are just opening up and the consumers and companies are buying a lot of new phones, putting more smartphones in the market," said McDowell. That means more competition for Qualcomm, which is seeing its market share in China fall. In the second quarter,
