4.2 Feedback is not accepted through the Win7QL website. Thirty-five years ago, Neil Armstrong stepped out of a spacecraft that had

circled the moon and planted his footprint there. He started walking in the sand as if he had never been there before, but he wasn't alone. His old friend Buzz Aldrin was already there. Buzz and Neil were spending a night together on the surface, just as the two men had spent a night together 35 years ago on

the moon. That night on the moon, 36 years ago, marks the beginning of a glorious relationship between humans and the moon. When Neil and Buzz were together on the moon, they said they never felt alone because they were sharing a moment in the cosmos that no one else on Earth had experienced. We were, all of us, together in the universe. It was a natural outgrowth of the Apollo mission and the conviction that the moon should never be separated from Earth. It was a logical outgrowth of that conviction to make humankind's first base on the moon a permanent outpost, a place that will become a human place, a
