Download this PDF from the PDF Writer, were shown to be in cancer cells and lymphocytes. We hypothesize that the cancer-associated cells are released in saliva and transferred to the cell culture medium to promote fibroblast proliferation. This is the first demonstration of cancer-associated cells in saliva and their transfer to cell culture medium. The cells isolated from the human cancer cell lines in this study were confirmed to be cancer cells by immunocytochemistry to label a specific cellular marker. Furthermore, DNA analysis is required to identify this population of cells in the cell culture medium. It is likely that these cells also originate from the patient from whom the saliva sample was obtained. The existence of these cells in the cell culture medium suggests that these cells can be transferred into culture medium from cancer-associated cells in saliva. Such transfer of cells from cancer-associated cells in saliva may contribute to development of cancers. The transfer of these cells has been observed to occur under conditions of elevated ROS generation (16-0-0-8171). Saliva is known to contain abundant antioxidants to protect salivary glands from oxidative stress (17-0-0-8171). Thus, the antioxidants in saliva may inhibit the transfer of these cells. This possibility requires further investigation. The cells in the culture medium were transferred to lymphocytes (Fig. 4A) (14-0-0-8171) (ref-type="Fig"). Lymphocytes are normally transferred from the cell culture medium to the culture medium of other cells, suggesting that the lymphocytes were activated (17-0-0-8171). To the best of our knowledge
