Press F1 for help.'s argument that the court should impose sanctions under Mass.R.A.P. 24(d) is without merit. Affirmed. NOTES [1] Rule 24(d) reads in relevant part: "If a pleading is not timely served, the court may, if the justice so orders, enter a default against the party who failed to serve it, on notice to the party who has already served his answer or reply, or upon his motion." [Manifestations of thymoma in children]. In the literature, we found few cases of thymoma in childhood. We describe the clinical, cytological, histological and ultrastructural findings in a 3-years-old boy and an 8-years-old girl with a thymoma. In the boy, the tumor was located in the thorax with pleural effusion, hepatomegaly, splenomegaly, and pericardial effusion. He underwent an operation of resection of the tumor together with the pleura and pericardium. Histological examination and ultrastructural findings revealed a germinal center type thymoma with abundant lymphocytes, plasma cells, macrophages, and epithelioid cells. In the girl, the tumor was located in the left breast, and histological findings revealed Hassall's corpuscle-like lesions. The histological finding of thymoma is that of a neoplastic tissue consisting of two to five types of lymphoid cells. In the fetal period, a few lymphoid cells become visible, which become numerous and are rich in follicular dendritic cells in the second trimester. Many small lymphocytes remain throughout the infancy and childhood. Also, T-cells, B-cells, plasma cells and eosinophils may be seen. The epithelial cells are well differentiated. Malignant lymphoma consists of pleomorphic cells. No neoplastic cells are found in a thymoma. Ultrastructural study shows that mature lymphoid cells and plasma cells may be seen. When thymoma is suspected, bronchoscopy, radiographic examination of the thorax, abdominal ultrasound, and measurement of serum levels of the tumor marker, such as lactic dehydrogenase and ferritin, may be helpful in making the diagnosis.[Computed tomography of the chest in the diagnosis of bronchial lesions]. Netflix users who were hoping to binge-watch their favorite drama before it returned with its third season are out of luck: “Orange Is the New Black” will not hit the streaming platform until June 17. Despite the delay, the series and its stars are holding on to hope that their four-season run is not over yet. On Thursday, the streaming service announced that season three will premiere on June 17, 2015, for the video on demand (VOD) service, and in its standard and premium cable TV channels on June 7, 2015. The announcement was made after Netflix’s quarterly earnings conference call for the third quarter of 2014, in which it reported a $0.73 per-share loss in the third quarter, with subscriber growth of 2.02 million. This is the first time that “Orange Is the New Black” has been delayed by Netflix. The second season originally came out in July 2013. “I always knew I would never get my jailbird fantasy,” said Taryn Manning, who plays Taystee on the show. “I can’t tell you how much I have been pining to see the rest of this season, to be on the other side of the wall, if you will. And to finally get my chance to tell my story.” The delay has made some fans a little uneasy, but the cast said they are looking forward to the upcoming season. “I think we are all very hopeful. I think we all feel the same way that people feel about Christmas Day,” said Uzo Aduba, who plays Suzanne “Crazy Eyes” Warren. “It’s a long wait, but I think we’re all hopeful. I think we’re all excited.
