The fact that rhinos did once roam in South Africa adds even more interest to this picture. So when I saw a picture like this to print, it was not to get a favor from my wife. The Laga bones were excavated by Aug van der Geest, a paleontologist who worked in South Africa in the early 1900's. He found this fossil rhino, the only one of its kind found in Africa. Why Was I Interested in this Picture? Since I am an amateur paleontologist, I use my art as a reminder to follow in the footsteps of the first paleontologists. The artists during the Paleo Era were certainly more knowledgeable than the scientists of today. So we artists can learn a lot about paleontology just by studying the artist's renderings of fossils. If I had had the opportunity to meet a paleontologist who found the same ancient species, I would have tried to explain some of the details in the fossil that I had recognized. There is much to discuss about such an encounter. So I continue to follow my interests in Paleontology even though I may not be able to travel back in time.no no my

I would like to use the Android event logging system to record what my app is doing. I can see how to record events by calling Context#startLogging(), but how can I use the event-logging data? A: The LogCat tool allows you to view the event log, and in versions prior to Froyo it allowed you to search it. In Froyo you can now open the log using the ADB shell to achieve the same thing, but to search you'd have to modify the log file. I would recommend you use the new logging facility, but the event log for older versions of Android will be useful if you have to. A: The startLogging() method seems to cause the start_event_log.txt log to
