Suddenly, the man's dog fell into the lake and swam to the end. But the dog couldn't swim. Soon the poor dog was suffocating and drowning. Fortunately, the man found a motorboat in the stormy lake. The man got on the boat and started the motor. As he powered the boat along, he saw a boat that was sinking into the lake. He turned the boat around and slowly and carefully rescued the drowning dog. The tired man got into the dinghy and fell asleep. When he woke up, he looked and saw that he had made it safely to the other side of the lake. But the dog was nowhere to be seen. The man was heartbroken and felt a strong urge to swim back and find the drowning dog. BUT- the man was worried about what would happen if the boat broke or if the dinghy leaked. He decided to use his boomerang to try to fly from the boat to the other side of the lake. As the man was flying over the lake, he saw the dog, but was too low to make a successful throw. He prayed that the boomerang would land so he could save the dog. When he realized that the boomerang had landed, the man took off his shoes and threw them, hoping that the boomerang would pick up the shoes, so that he could use them as flippers to land safely. Then, he made a mad leap from the dinghy to the shore. As he ran

All credits goes to them. This applicant has recently developed a method to make clothing by means of printing directly on a continuous filament knit and then knitting the printed knit into a base fabric to form a knitted fabric. Thus, the garment would be unitary, featuring the printed design, the hand, the drape and the durability of knitted fabric. The printed knitted article would also provide a degree of comfort similar to that obtained with wearing a knit type of garment but without the knitting. He has described the process for his application in U.S. Ser. No. 07/968,128, filed Oct. 24, 1992, entitled "Continuous Filament Knit Print Directed to Printed Knit". Directed to printed knit is a process which can be used to form a continuous filament knit which can have a multiple continuous filament knit pattern. The apparatus used to direct the knitted fabric to a printed knit is apparently extremely effective and is able to direct any desired pattern from a tangle of continuous filament yarns. However, if the repeat pattern of the continuous filament knit to be printed is a relatively complicated pattern and the knitting direction is not maintained substantially in the running direction of the knitted fabric, the resulting knitted fabric will tend to have large deviations from straightness. In addition, if the knit is produced by knitting a staple fiber, which on a main strand basis is comprised of a plurality of single filaments, the resulting knitted fabric, when formed on a machine having straight running, will have its knitted direction along the periphery of the knitted fabric. Thus, while this knitted direction could be stabilized, due to its position along the periphery, it would generally be accessible to further processing which might interfere with the intended pattern, such as sewing on seaming tapes. While the configuration of the apparatus which directs the knitted fabric to the printed knit
