Ridge Racer is one of the most influential franchises in driving game history. Created for PlayStation and launched with the PlayStation 2 in 2000, Ridge Racer remains a benchmark for innovative racing games to this day. The initial Ridge Racer game, subtitled GT for its core focus on arcade-style racing, launched with a roster of racers including Kenuichio Harima (Toro Rosso), Daisuke Ito (Toyota GT-86), Ryosuke Nakano (Honda NSX) and Kenji Harima (Toyota Corolla). Ridge Racer 2, subtitled Advance for its evolution into a fully licensed racing game, was the first Ridge Racer title to be playable on home consoles. Still drawing inspiration from arcade racing, it continued the same roster of players along with the inclusion of returning racers such as John Sharp (Mazda RX-7) and Riki Lindemann (Mini Cooper S). Ridge Racer 3, subtitled Extreme, marked a further evolution in gameplay. Harking back to the groundbreaking innovations of the franchise, it offered blistering performance and cutting-edge visuals on PlayStation 2. Motivated by the same core commitment to innovation, the Ridge Racer franchise has evolved alongside the platform they're available on. Ridge Racer V, subtitled World, marked the first Ridge Racer title available on home consoles, as well as the first Ridge Racer title to be released on the PC platform, with the arrival of iRacing. World also marked the first Ridge Racer title to be developed for an audience outside of Japan, offering a new perspective on the world of Ridge Racer. The franchise has also been a commercial success. With the release of Ridge Racer 7 on PlayStation 3, the series has enjoyed a return to a home console for the first time since Ridge Racer 2. Ridge Racer 7 has also continued to push the boundaries of the platform on which it is available. This content is only available in an online streaming format. There's also the risk that the defendant will misuse the forums. If you foresee any of these problems, then saying nothing leaves you with no blame on your side. Write up your liability disclaimers, throw them in an email, and get them signed by both parties. Even with this though, a simple statement of "By signing below, you acknowledge, agree, and surrender any rights you have in connection with any fan-made game made in your name." and your signature can save a lot of pain and hassle should something go really wrong. A well-written document and a personalized signature can do wonders and make it quite hard for a court to rule one way or the other for a personal injury lawsuit. Again, these are only some good ways to go about this. Those of you who are the defendant in a case might want to determine your ins and outs before you start. It's not perfect, but it'll help you out more than good advice from random forum posters. Hope you find it a help. Why this now? Well, we've already passed the date for the big day. Game participants are also encouraged to start posting their interpretation of the game. More than that, we're also looking for the story so far. Got any ideas or thoughts on things to do? Be sure to post them here or email us at: supergaggenmagicrules@gmail.com I am poking around the javascript a little for a crazy project I am hard at work putting into my weblog. And I found something not related to the project, but something I found fascinating anyways. quote Posters can get more than their virtual ears reddened by the OPAM, and the knowledge that they are, to a certain extent, powerless to deal with it.
