The features is to discover what your ISP's DNS resolver may be doing and change it and see if they're caching. Best thing to do is use the Google search engine and search for their IP address. First hit should tell you everything you want to know. The info is all on their public website. You can find it under the DNS tab. You want their IP address. If you don't know, then that's one of the best free tools that you can use. Use the IP address in the "Method" field and then choose "lookup google" and it will tell you everything you want to know. Google will not show you any information on a proxy unless you use a specific domain for that (your proxy will go to a different website) and even then you won't see the actual IP. In other words, it's a free trick.The field of the invention relates generally to the simultaneous monitoring of objects, and more particularly, to a system for tracking the position of an object that is provided with a reference mark that can be periodically compared with corresponding reference marks on successive objects and that can be determined by time-of-flight to report the position of the object. The use of cameras to capture an object and provide an image is well known. The image of an object may be provided to another system to facilitate tracking of the object. In addition, the position of the object may be determined based on the image of the object. This position may facilitate mapping the object to be tracked. A common example of the use of a camera is to track the position of a vehicle or a train as they move along a track. It is useful to track the position of the vehicle along the track, as the position of the vehicle may affect operations of the vehicle or the track. To track the position of the vehicle, an image of the vehicle is captured and tracked. A train traveling along a railway is provided with a reference mark on the wheels of the train. The reference mark on the wheels allows a camera to position the reference mark within an image. By knowing the position of the wheels in the image, the position of the train traveling along the railway can be determined. This is a common system for determining the position of the train. One difficulty with this type of system is that the reference mark on the wheels is often not the same size as that of the reference mark on the vehicle. Thus, if the vehicle is perpendicular to the direction of travel, a longer distance is covered by

Chemotaxis as a cause of phase separation in suspensions of self-propelled particles. We show that chemotaxis in suspensions of self-propelled particles, which induces a current in the direction of the particles' velocity, can cause a phase transition from a globally ordered liquid to a disordered gas. The transition is caused by the anisotropic nature of the density of the suspension, induced by the presence of a strong persistent current. Strong deviation from the isotropic homogeneous state is obtained even in a very dilute suspension (on a short timescale) and for vanishingly small propulsion force. Clifford Leach Clifford Edward Leach (16 October 1934 – 25 April 2005) was an English singer-songwriter and pianist. Biography A native of Hove, Leach was born to Ernest and Kathleen Leach. He attended Hove School and Hove Grammar School, where he was selected for the Royal Military School of Music. By age 16 he was also playing in the local rhythm and blues band The Light Blues with David Gae, Ken Leach, and John Earle. Leach then completed an apprenticeship as a taxidermist and studied law at Kingston College of Music, London. His first band the Raleigh was in residence at Ronnie Scott's Club between 1958 and 1962. Leach's first solo album, Want You, was released in 1972. His career peaked with the huge UK hit "Mama Said" in 1983. He wrote all the songs, from the original demo, which was produced by Pete Townshend. The single peaked at #2 in the UK Singles Chart (the next No. 1 was "Electric Landlady"), and was the 47th most successful song of the 20th century there. Leach's album of the same title followed in 1984. The song is said to have been written about his wife Alison. The song entered the UK charts at No. 7, and was also a top 30 hit in Ireland and
