Yates, pictured in action against Arkansas State in the NCAA Peach Bowl, is hoping to make the jump to the NFL. (Mike Legant | Syracuse Athletics) Syracuse, NY - T.J. Yates has made a career change. The former Syracuse quarterback will be trying to make the jump to the National Football League this week with a tryout at the NFL combine in Indianapolis. Yates, who is entering his fourth season with the Orange and will be free to leave after the bowl game, was an All-American during his first two seasons at Syracuse. This season he completed 67 percent of his passes and tossed eight touchdowns against just four interceptions. He also ran for four touchdowns as a dual-threat quarterback for the Orange. Yates played at Western Carolina before he decided to give football a try. He set a freshman record for passing yards (2,726), tying a school record by throwing for two touchdowns and rushing for another in a 38-33 win over Penn State in the 2015 Camellia Bowl. The 6-foot, 199-pounder also helped the Catamounts to a second-place finish in the Southern Conference, leading Western Carolina to a 6-3 overall record and 4-
