"The technology used for FIFA 22 demonstrates a progression from the previous title in the series, which did not use motion capture, and is a testament to the improvements we can deliver," says Matt Southern, FIFA Lead Gameplay Designer. "As always, we know our fans are players' biggest supporters and they want the FIFA experience to be second to none in terms of both gameplay and authentic detail." Motion capture technology allows Electronic Arts to present the most responsive and accurate player models in the franchise. The new controls system is designed to deliver responsive control similar to the arcade action of the PES series. Instead of an abstract button layout, players will take commands from a digital stick with a range of movement and twist, as well as delicate controls to pull off precise, controlled actions. FIFA 22 Features World Class Player Animation Players in the FIFA 22 game will move with more naturalness and fluidity than ever before. Players will move with the same fluidity as the big-name players of the real world. Players will use a flexible control stick and highly responsive PAS (Precise Action Sensitivity) controls system. PAS uses movements captured from real-life players, as well as the ability to swap between PAS and analog buttons. FIFA 22 introduces subtle face and body deformations in-game that give PES-style added realism. For example, while a player in the next-generation ball control system is turning his head, you will also see his neck crease that is typical for any real-life player. FIFA 22 introduces the PES-style "extended movement animation" system that powers key moves, enabling a higher level of player interaction with the ball. FIFA 22 introduces PAS (Precise Action Sensitivity), which allows players to physically control in game. Players will take commands from a digital stick with a range of movement and twist, as well as delicate controls to pull off precise, controlled actions. Dual-stick control and dribbling controls appear together in FIFA 22. The new controls system will have two main sticks and one more delicate stick to control the player's movement with. All modern goalkeepers and defenders in the new game will use dedicated controls when defending. Defenders can now execute low-side foot-punt actions and
