This relates to your point about white people being looked at as "monolithic" or "together" or "the same," and thus having to be described as "offended" by those categories... 3. The racism in Natives should be extremely obvious. Simply by asking the question, "How does it feel to be a racist?" we are seeing how absurdly ignorant we have been for centuries, and as such, how powerful we've been. However, you have to be willing to deal with the fact that these things have happened before, and are likely to continue happening. 4. The only way to win a battle is to lose it. We lost the battle on being uneducated and accepting racist stories about indigenous peoples for a long time. In that sense, we're even. 5. The question we have to ask ourselves is: at this point, what will we do? What would be the most equitable and fair way to deal with the Native peoples of Canada? One hopes that a massive display of upset, shame and basically trying to apologize will bring the issue to the forefront and open the door to something better. @Rachel on Twitter "People are afraid to talk about this stuff. We need to have these conversations." — Rachel Parsons @rachelparsons "We should be safe and able to play when we want to play,

I develop an application for class project. I need to develop an application that will show the graphics in a canvas. In order to show the right point on canvas, I need to convert the coordinate system (PyQt coordinates) to GIS (Mercator) coordinates and vice versa. I found an application for that on: However, it seems that it has been discontinued. I also checked, what is the most important libraries for python projects (such as matplotlib, pylab etc). PyQt seems to be the best one, but I cannot find the source code. Anybody knows if the project has been completed? I would be very grateful if someone tell how I could make that conversion. A: The link you provided is dead. You can't use its functionality. Since you're using Qt 4.8.x and PyQt 4.2.x, I'll assume you want to use PyQt4.QgsCoordinateTransform(), which is documented here. You'll need the QgsCoordinateReferenceSystem plugin for this, which is available here. There are installation instructions here. The PyQt docs for QgsCoordinateTransform are here. I'm not sure why you'd want to use a Mercator projection, but I know you've asked about that, and you can certainly do that with a projection. You can see the API and examples on the web here. Q: reading and writing the value of a text box to a file The code i made works fine, it's just that the file is read only, I tried changing it to output.write but

Melt blown fabrics are well known in the art and have been used in a variety of applications including diapers, other infant and child care products and for fabrics for other garments. Melt blowing involves the extrusion of polymeric fibers at an elevated temperature and under pressure through at least one orifice, or die, having an orifice diameter substantially smaller than the diameter of the extruded fiber, resulting in the formation of a plurality of tiny fibers which may be used in a wide variety of applications. Typically the extruded fibers are pulled or drawn by a passage in the die through a series of guiding and cooling rollers to a collector or on a conveyor belt. Melt blown fabrics typically consist of at least two layers. The outer layer is typically a polyolefin (e.g., polypropylene) and serves as a moisture barrier while the inner layer is typically a textile. The outer layer serves also as an insulator and may be of sufficient thickness so that the heat sealing of the inner layer to a garment is not necessary. A strong bond between the two layers is provided by the heat sealing of the melt blown fibers on the outer layer to a fabric backing layer to form a seam, e.g., for diapers
