`ListComprehension` allows you to apply some code to a list of elements and then return the results. In this example, we'll take a list that contains multiple `Vec3`'s, and using `ListComprehension` we'll calculate the `x`, `y`, and `z` values for the list. We can do this because all of the values in the list are vectors, and the `Vector` class has a handy `apply` function that will calculate the 3 values of a vector. Here's a simple list of vectors:

```
```python [Vector3(1,2,3), Vector3(4,5,6)] ```
```

So the first thing we'll need to do is define a lambda function that will take a list of `Vec3`'s and apply the `apply` method on them, returning a list of `Vector3`'s.

```
```python def get_vectors_x(vectors: List[Vector3]): List[Vector3] = vectors.map(Vector3.apply).toList() ```

Now the next step is to pass the function in to the

`ListComprehension` function. ``python
ListComprehension(get_vectors_x)([Vector3(1,2,3), Vector3(4,5,6)]) ``
