The article reports how the Moon moves in relationship to Mars throughout the year, and how this affects the tides. Mars' pull on the tides averages about 17 centimeters (7 inches), but this can be as high as 40 centimeters. A past study by UC Berkeley's Bo Li and Jan Koon shows this diminishes to about 13 centimeters (5 inches) in the summer (June to September) and averages 17 centimeters in the winter (December to February). A couple of days of these changes could equal the rise and fall of a typical human tide. The Moon's gravitational pull on Earth's tides is about equal to Earth's mass in comparison to Moon's mass, while the Moon's pull on Mars is much smaller. Mars is about four times the mass of Earth. If they were to orbit each other, the Moon's gravity would greatly overpower Mars' gravity, which is not the case as Pro Evolution Soccer is a football video game series originally developed by Konami, with Konami's existing licensing and publishing agreement not ending until Q4 2014. android and unity: does not work properly with subclasses? I'm working on a Unity based project, android with libGDX is also used for the performance optimization. This project needs a lot of classes that are derived from multiple classes, and I added unity to android project through Unity command line build to android. Then generated the dex and placed it into my android project. After that I found an error when unity run as a serviceworker. java.lang.RuntimeException: java.lang.NoSuchMethodError: javax.servlet.http.HttpServletRequest.getAttributeNames()Ljava/util/Map; It seems unity still uses javax.servlet.http.HttpServletRequest's default implementation of getAttributeNames(), and android's implementation of HttpServletRequest.getAttributeNames() doesn't exist anymore, which make it impossible to implement the subclasses. A: java.lang.NoSuchMethodError: javax.servlet.http.HttpServletRequest.getAttributeNames()Ljava/util/Map; This exception is thrown from a class that has no implementation for the methods that were not present. In the case of the org.apache.http.HttpServletRequest, Android was probably importing org.apache.http.HttpServletRequest into the android project. The resolution is to either not mix your Android project with the unity-built apache-http-servlet project, or to remove the dependency between the two, as a unity build creates a copy of the Android version of the source code with references and implements that aren't actually present on the Android version, due to the fact that the package is only used by unity.
