Drag racing, also known as drifting, is a form of auto racing where the driver of a vehicle steers the vehicle at high speeds through a narrow, banked, oval-shaped track. Sprint racing, on the other hand, is a form of auto racing that encourages the use of only forward momentum. To win a sprint race, the driver must pass the checkered flag located at the beginning of the race before other cars. To win in a sprint race, the driver must accelerate quickly and displace other cars from the track. Cars can be hand-drivable and have 2-wheel drive or they can be 4-wheel drive. After the 1970s, electric cars dominated sprint racing, and in the late 1980s and 1990s, turbocharged gasoline-powered vehicles dominated. Sprint racing has remained relatively unchanged since the 1920s, with only slight modifications to the cars and the track. Drag racing tracks are oval-shaped, while sprint tracks are flat, allowing for more streamlined cars. The more a car can be turned without losing traction, the greater the benefits. In drag racing, the competition is focused on elapsed time rather than on overtaking. With four wheels, the skidpad allows drivers to use the corners of the track to rotate the car and achieve faster speeds. The group of cars that compete in drag d41b202975

Pulseball is a Filipino game of skill in which players throw balls over a low arch or wire with a plastic ball. Players wearing soft tennis shoes beat the other with the soft ball when it bounces off the arch. It is similar to the European game table tennis, or ping pong. It is played by men, women, and children. History Pulseball was invented by the late player Jonah Buyongko, who invented a better projectile ball for the game in 1956. It is an invention that was inspired by the invention of tennis balls, which were invented in the late nineteenth century by U.S. soldiers at the military camp of Fort Clinch in Port Gibson, Louisiana. The inspiration came from a U.S. soldier named Tom Crouch who actually claimed to have discovered the first tennis ball.

However, later on, the story of the invention of the first tennis ball was proven to be a false claim. Jonah was the first player to wear a tennis shoe on his feet while playing Pulseball. He made the idea so he could go farther from the wire and make the ball go faster. He obtained the permission of the then Athletic Association of the Philippines (then referred to as Ateneo University and later renamed to the present name) for the first ever Pulseball Championship. Jonah's basketball was inspired by how some other sport players are able to bounce the ball right back when they miss it. The game was formally played in the Philippines in 1976 at Ateneo University. Pulseball was played in the National Games of the Philippines that year.

"Eto, Eto" Naming the sport 'Pulseball', which is the Tagalog name for softball, or baseball, is actually a play on the English word "ping-pong". It comes from a local phrase in Tagalog, "Eto, eto", which means "that's right, it's right". This is because when Jonah Buyongko invented the Pulseball, he did it all by himself, without collaborating with anyone; he did not think that people would do it well because it was not a conventional sport. This is where the "Eto, Eto" phrase comes from. Equipment Pulseball is played with a plastic ball similar to the size of a regulation tennis ball, the front of which is sewed with a thin strip of cloth in a spherical pattern. For setting up the
