“When you combine live gameplay with depth and accuracy, you create authentic, unrivalled and immersive soccer,” said Charles Alcock, FIFA Executive Producer. “We are bringing a live simulation to the next level through this ground-breaking player motion technology and it has already given us what we believe is the deepest and most authentic soccer experience for a generation.” “This game allows us to capture and analyse motion data in unprecedented detail,” said Oliver Bierhoff, Head of FIFA Sports. “And it comes at a critical time in soccer history, when the game is growing quickly around the world and more people are playing soccer at the grassroots level. With live, accurate and engaging soccer on every platform, FIFA 22 has something for everyone.” The FIFA 22 engine used for this feature is also used to power FIFA Ultimate Team, giving the game more depth and gameplay options on the pitch with new ways to play. EA SPORTS says this new technology has the potential to change the way players can be used in future FIFA games. “FIFA 22 uses motion capture and AI to ensure every game is authentically alive with live player movements and superb on-pitch action,” said David Rutter, FIFA Senior Technology and Design Advisor. “We’re already seeing players and coaches exploring new ways of using player data to alter and improve their game.” Motion Capture & Player Data 22 maintains the award-winning ‘player personality’ and gameplay of FIFA 19, while adding a more in-depth 'player feeling' and new ways to look at how players interact on the pitch. The game's AI technology has also been enhanced. FIFA 22's new 'player personality' gives players more individuality, making them appear unique at all times on the pitch. FIFA's AI systems have been enhanced so that they better capture the feel of different player types. Each player's attributes, such as passing, shooting, dribbling, tackling, heading and free kicks are now tied to a specific player in FIFA 22. This gives a more in-depth experience for players, as well as allowing them to easily compare their attributes to that of other players of their type. The new 'player feeling' is now applied on the pitch to each player as a result of how they interact with teammates and opponents.
