Floor mats are widely employed for safety, for aesthetic purposes, and for other reasons. The most common examples are the mats placed around the sides of a vehicle, particularly when a child's car seat is secured. Unfortunately, these floor mats frequently slip out of place and are often stepped on by unsuspecting pedestrians, thereby exposing sharp edges. The most common mat for this purpose is a strip of material that is sewn along its edges to make it a continuous strip. Such a strip, when placed on a floor surface, has a tendency to buckle during use. Japanese Published Patent No. 2005-270346 discloses a floor mat that has a continuous strip that is of sufficient length to cover the width of the vehicle, and that is made of a non-slip polyvinyl chloride (PVC) material. Additionally, this mat has a protruding stem along the bottom edge of the mat. When the mat is placed on a floor, the stem supports the bottom end of the mat above the floor. Unfortunately, the stem itself extends below the bottom of the mat and leaves sharp edges and possibly loose portions of the stem. Accordingly, there is a need for an improved floor mat that is inexpensive, durable, and attractive to the eye. Q: How to render multilanguage items in C#? I have a multilanguage application. I want to display a list of entries. The entries can be found in many languages, for example German and English. I display the list in a ListView but I don't want to render the labels in the default language of the user. I want to make it work for all user languages.

Q: How to avoid the bounce effect when scrolling the JScrollPane I am using the scroll pane to show the content on full screen. I noticed that during the scroll the content is moving without the scrollbars. Is there a way to prevent this? A: Just don't use a JScrollPane, use a JPanel and the scrollbars you want with its constant set to 4. Remember, the JScrollPane just draws an invisible frame around your viewable area, the JPanel's scrollbars handle the scrolling. A: Use a JScrollPane, but instead of setting the height and width of the JScrollPane, set the preferred size of the JScrollPane to the height and width of the JPanel within it (unless you want the JScrollPane to scroll off-screen) A basic example below: import java.awt.EventQueue; import java.awt.GridBagConstraints; import java.awt.GridBagLayout; import javax.swing.JButton; import javax.swing.JFrame; import javax.swing.JLabel; import javax.swing.JPanel; import javax.swing.JScrollPane; import javax.swing.JTextField; import javax.swing.UIManager; import javax.swing.UnsupportedLookAndFeelException; public class JScrollTest {

Updated: 19 December 2014 13:44 IST Germany's Nico Rosberg becomes the first man on the second grid of the F1 season as he sits on pole position for the season-opening race in Qatar on Tuesday. Ferrari duo Sebastian Vettel and Fernando Alonso and Red Bull's Daniel Ricciardo are among the drivers to contest the six-hour race at the Doha International Raceway, a fast and technical circuit on the border with Saudi Arabia. Rosberg, who last won the race in 2011, was quick to pour cold water over the prospect of ending the season as F1 champion. "I'm going to do my very best to become World Champion again," he said.
