.Q: Retrieving and printing attributes of an anonymous type I have a pair of objects in a form that I need to retrieve from the database (MapleTree.cs) but I need them in an anonymous type. myForm has three attribute labels (username, email, password). When I create a new object of AnonymousType in my viewModel code behind, I can't do much with them other than to save them to DB. I want the attributes to be retrieved, data bound to the correct view, and output on the form when the View is loaded. How can this be done? A: I am not sure why you would want to create anonymous types here, since you are already trying to send them to the database with an SqlCommand. You would need to use a class instead of an anonymous one. You also need to create a class to hold the username, email, and password properties and then you can do the following. var user = (from u in db.Users where u.Username == username select u); Top Menu TB Data Center at Baidu's Global Data Center It seems that Baidu is the biggest spender in building a data center. Now it has two of them in China. It's a GigaDataCenter that doubles as a game center for its employees. It's an interesting statement from the country's largest Internet company when we consider Baidu's role as a pioneer in China's web surfing revolution and its massive brainpower to develop search engines. No doubt more success is yet to come in China, if you believe the mission statement: "Baidu is committed to Baidu's mission of "Baidu-ing the world" - creating the fastest and most user-friendly experience for the masses." Apparently, Baidu has a culture of workers - namely staff that could be the world's smartest, most energetic and smartest some other company. The first such data center came online in February this year. It's in Beijing and has a data capacity of 130 Petaboxes (130,000 terabytes). The second data center is in Inner Mongolia and has twice the capacity of the first one. It comes online in June. Do you think it's cost effective to build a data center for your employees?Q: Actionscript3 for loop doesn't
