.Q: How to change an element of a dynamically created table in javascript I have a dynamically created table in which it has 2 rows and 6 columns. I am trying to update a cell with a color, i have an event handler that gets fired when user presses on the delete button of the table. However i am not sure how to update the currently selected cell. Am i supposed to use document.getElementByID() or is there a more efficient way of doing this. function color() { //code to get element from id that is clicked, and update the background color of that cell } I am using document.getElementByID also if there are no other choices A: If you want to update only cell with the id "mycell", then you can update as below, JS function update_cell(id){ var el=document.getElementById(id); el.style.backgroundColor="red"; } Else, if you want to update the content of cell, then you can use function updateCellContent(id){ var el=document.getElementById(id); el.innerHTML="Red"; } For more Details, Read the below Jsfiddle Demo, Reference (LINK) if you want to change whole table, then you can use the below, JS function updateTable(id){ var el=document.getElementById(id); el.style.backgroundColor="red"; } Updated JSFiddle Demo import sys import pip from

Cardiologia guadalajara 7ma edicion pdf – Download Cardiologia Guadalajara 7 Edicion Pdf FreeQ: How can a non-Wife-Beater Ask user how to cut edge off of shoe I have a friend who was mauled by a pack of dogs. One took hold of her shoe and just started ripping. Her husband is a typical "Bully" type and punched the dogs but the fight was long over before he could do it. The lady has these chipped and jagged edges on her shoe where the dog was getting a good clawing. She doesn't want to buy a whole new pair. Any ideas? A: Despite what you might want to believe, 'overhead' is the only tool that works for this job, since all other tools are less effective due to at least one of the following factors: Overhead is ineffective due to no direct path to the soft bony area of the foot Overhead is ineffective due to no direct path to the hard bone area of the foot Overhead is ineffective due to limited range of motion causing bone to be sheared (also known as bone snapping, if done by a human) Overhead is ineffective because the momentum of the dog or other damage is too great The best thing to do is get a wheelbarrow and get your friend her shoes to a shop/laboratory to repair the damage. If you don't have a wheelbarrow, you'll need to ask a friend to pick up her shoes for you. Once you have the shoes repaired, remove them from the shoe box (or other container of your choice) and leave them in an air tight box until you can take them back to where they were repaired. This will prevent the shoes from drying out and the caking will help protect them from decay. If you wish to keep them, put them in a plastic bag and apply a small amount of borax for a good seal.
