You can download the full version to read your book on the go.O: Accessing variables from a method inside a class in JAVA I can't seem to access a variable inside of a method in a class. Here is my code: public class Dummy { public static void main(String[] args) { int myVariable = 1; System.out.println(myVariable); method(); int myVariable2 = 5; System.out.println(myVariable2); } public void method() { try { System.out.println("My variable is " + myVariable); } catch (Exception e) { e.printStackTrace(); } } } The problem is, even though the variable is available in the method, it is not printed in the terminal A: In java, fields and methods live in an object. When you call method() in main, you create a new instance of class Dummy. Thats why variable myVariable2 is 5. It belongs to an instance of Dummy class. When you call method() inside of main, you don't change the value of myVariable2. To access an instance variable inside of a method, use my
