Spiceworks Crack Torrent for Windows.Iran's Revolutionary Guard says that it halted its nuclear fuel enrichment program in 2003, a year after it began secretly enriching uranium at a facility in the central mountains. The statement, carried by Iran's Fars news agency, was the first disclosure by Tehran of the end of the process. The Guard said that all nuclear materials and equipment had been removed from the facility in the mountainous Qom province. It did not provide details on what prompted the decision. Iran says its aim is to build a light atomic reactor for producing medical isotopes for cancer patients, but Western officials say the plant could be an experimental effort to build an atomic bomb. Enrichment is the first of two steps needed to produce the fissile material from uranium ore. Israel has said that it has solid intelligence that Iran has made at least a start on the process and says it believes the country is committed to acquiring a nuclear weapon. But the last reports of activities at Qom were in 2008. State-run television did not carry the announcement on Monday. The semi-official Fars news agency said that the decision was taken in 2003. A news agency run by the Revolutionary Guard said that the decision was made in 2003 and quoted commander Mohammad Ali Jafari as saying it had been confirmed by then-President Mohammad Khatami. The explanation, in a statement by the Revolutionary Guard's Qods Force, was also carried by the semi-official Tasnim news agency and took credit for stopping the process. Qods, the force's espionage and covert operations arm, is considered close to the clerical leadership. The statement said that "everything" had been carried out in line with a Qods Force plan that "was disclosed and announced to
