The dietary supplementation of L-arginine during pregnancy is reported to protect against oral glucose stimulation and enhance hepatic and peripheral insulin sensitivity in nonpregnant animals. The protective effect of L-arginine might be due to an effect on cation fluxes. In the present study we assessed the effect of L-arginine treatment on food intake and glycemia in pregnant rats. Pregnant rats were used to evaluate the effect of L-arginine supplementation on maternal food intake and blood glucose. Rats received L-arginine or saline supplementation (10 g/L/day) from 5 days before to 5 days after mating. At 13th day of pregnancy, rats were given an oral glucose (1.5 g/kg) or saline. L-arginine supplementation significantly decreased food intake when compared with the saline group. L-Arginine treatment did not change glycemia in saline-treated rats, but significantly reduced glycemia of those treated with oral glucose. The L-arginine supplementation did not alter the body weight gain during pregnancy or the body weight of the pups. We conclude that the treatment of L-arginine during gestation reduces the glycemic response to oral glucose administration. the United States in general, and to the plaintiffs' claims in particular, it is hereby ORDERED, that the government's Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED, and it is further ORDERED, that the government's Emergency Motion for a Stay of Pending Prosecution is DENIED as moot. NOTES [1] Under the terms of the 1982 Agreement, the government retained certain prisoner custody privileges in the federal prison at Ojinaga. See id. [2] 25 C.F.R. § 42.2(a) states that the Bureau of Prisons "may... reject a transfer of an offender if the Director determines that the transfer would not be in the best interest of the offender or the public."
