morning: A view of Mount Fuji. I'm going to tell you this like it is, The Picture Of My Life. It's perfect - once you're there, you just want to stay. Mount Fuji is 1,500 metres above sea level and all I can say is it's amazing because even with the clear morning sky, the snow and the clouds and the flood of people all headed towards the summit, it's not much higher than sea level. It's actually really close to the coast. That means there's a chance of getting spectacular views as well. I will say, if you do climb up the peak, you need to do it with a really heavy backpack. The really steep way up is only for experienced mountain climbers. And, it's cold. I wore two pairs of socks. It's not just the stunning beauty of Mount Fuji that draws people in every year, it's also that it's the 'national treasure' of Japan. Pictures of the mountain and its surrounding views are everywhere you look in Japan. I'm pretty sure it might be the most photographed mountain in the
