In Texas, your right to examine the DNA sample is usually limited to determining whether the sample should be destroyed, or to determining whether the sample should be preserved in a state or federal repository of genetic information (i.e., gene banks). State law does not provide a right to examine DNA samples to determine an identity claim. Duty of candor to the Commission is defined as a duty to make a true, full and frank disclosure of all facts and circumstances to the Commission, even if a failure to disclose those facts and circumstances would not violate any law, statute, rule or regulation. It would include, for example, all facts and circumstances that are material to the subject matter under investigation. A duty of candor to the Commission may be binding as an internal policy of the firm, and may obligate the firm to otherwise engage in actions that would otherwise not be required by law. In these cases, the duty of candor to the Commission may also become a direct duty of the Individual Firm to the Commission, independent of any individual's duty of candor under applicable law. Firms also have a duty of candor when they provide information to the Commission, regardless of whether they are legally required to do so, as long as such information is provided with a good faith belief that the information is true and complete. Such duty of candor includes, but is not limited to, the duty to provide only truthful information. Assume that the initiating event was an interruption in the patient's doctor-patient relationship and that the technique used was washing her hands. This is an example of close, the slightest possibility of a cause/effect relationship. The common law test of reasonable cause/probable cause is phrased as follows:
