No one has digitized that stuff before. So really what that translates into is, no one has stopped. No one has slowed down. Everyone has accelerated. And so that means that basically you have the right amount of developers and you have resources at a perfect level for a perfect digital life now. So what this means for content creators is that you can create digital content faster than you could ever have. And that's such a great part of this. You can build for devices, devices are going to be different, things are going to be different. You're going to push it, but the data is always going to be available for display. And so we're going to see businesses, organizations and individuals digitally get their hands on some content, much, much more than they ever have before. And then more importantly, the more different people are, the more quickly they learn. No one has stopped. No one has slowed down. Everyone has accelerated. And so in the heart of the no-code movement, it's all about people coming together and they're excited about helping each other and that's what we're seeing right now. No one wants to be sitting in a meeting room talking about this. People really only have a certain level of patience when it comes to discussion of this. And so as we all come together to make the world better by using these tools, that's what you're doing. Once we have that, then the video shows up on Facebook, and the viewer has watched the video, they're going to want to do something, whether it is comment, share, like or whatever. As you create content using a no-code solution, you want to give it the best chance to do that. That's really what we're striving for. We're trying to make it as easy as possible for content creators to author content, to make it as simple as possible. And if the end result is that it helps us, then great. That's what we want.

So that's it for now, guys. You can find the slides, the sponsorship link at bit.ly/sonyacidpro7, and if you're at stand E12. I hope I can see you there. Appreciate all your excitement over here, and I hope you have a great night. So what we came up with, we take that same content, and we rebuilt it with a drag-and-drop interface and allow you to do all of the coding and design on site and we expose all of the buttons that are normally in After Effects. And this is like a portal for a very dynamic and programmable experience that can be done live with no exposure of the design steps that are normally taking in that tool. You actually have the ability to also hand-customize the buttons on the fly. And this is a really good use case. So as a result of that we've created a market segment, we're gonna refer to it as a kind of generative tool suite, because it can be used for animation as well as code generation, and one-off projects, and they're really building blocks for designers, but also for developers, but if you're a designer, and you've got an idea and you're trying to, and you're old school and tried to go build it, you wanna go to the library and you wanna come up with a design block. It's very powerful, and it is in fact a completely different way to consume the programming, the design. The other one that's worth mentioning is a great example of customer wins, because every business does want to spend money. Unfortunately the high cost of anything, but we're one of the main driving forces behind the no-code movement. There are no-code platforms out there that are really priced at about half of what the Adobe and the Autodesk, and we would not have been able to do this 5ec8ef588b
