The 'installation' name can be a bit slippery. If this is a machine that will have the font installed on the machine, but it is limited to the users accessing that machine (it is not on a server). This is common for an intranet where a team of developers just want to use the font on their system. This can also be a mini-stock of servers where each server has access to the font library for a number of the applications that are running on the server. For instance, if you have a web server, each user that accesses the website will have access to the font for any pages they are viewing, even if it's just in an iframe. The 'License' name can be a bit slippery. This is the license for the font. It is where the font is checked to make sure it is not being used in ways that violate the license, and then checked to make sure it is not being used by anyone else. An extension of this is called a pool license, where the font is checked to make sure it is not being used in ways that violate the license, then checked to make sure it is not being used by anyone else, except it is being used by the license holder and their partners. Most of the time this is what it is called, but it can be used in various other ways. The License period is basically the period within which a licensee may use the Font Software under the specified License. It defines the duration of license, either as a calendar month, unless expressly stated otherwise. The Version number will be an identifier for the font. It is always numeric and identifies versions of the font, or places in the versions (i.e. in which beta version). Versions are identified by a dot separated numeric identifier.
