AB Bulk Mailer enables users to easily send bulk emails via SMTP servers.. Human papillomavirus types with high-grade squamous intraepithelial lesion and atypical squamous cells - cannot be confirmed if biopsies are taken from the vaginal or cervical canal. When a colposcopic biopsy from the vaginal or cervical canal confirms a high-grade squamous intraepithelial lesion (HSIL) or atypical squamous cells of undetermined significance (ASC-US) with a high probability of a high-grade intraepithelial lesion, an immuno-histochemical (IHC) study of the cervical and/or vaginal biopsy specimen should be performed. We performed an IHC study of a conventional cervical biopsy and a conventional vaginal biopsy for the patients whose biopsies from the vaginal or cervical canal confirmed HSIL or ASC-US and who wished to avoid colposcopy at an outpatient clinic. The immuno-histochemical patterns for HPV16, HPV18, HPV6/11, and/or HPV16/18 were as follows: 102/149 (68%) from the cervical canal, 109/149 (73%) from the vaginal canal, 65/66 (98%) from the cervical canal, and 91/103 (89%) from the vaginal canal. Out of 30 HPV-positive biopsy samples, 25 (83%) HPV-positive biopsy samples from the cervical canal, 16 (55%) HPV-positive biopsy samples from the vaginal canal, 14 (52%) HPV-positive biopsy samples from the cervix and anal canal, and 12 (48%) HPV-positive biopsy samples from the cervix and anal canal were graded high-grade intraepithelial lesions (HSILs). All HPV-positive biopsy samples from the cervix and anal canal were graded the same (HSILs)
