It's been several years since I've exported a docx that looked like it was made on some sort of primitive word processor, but I'm happy to say that Microsoft's docx format continues to become more decent. I especially like the new time stamping feature, although they warned about it, making the method dependant on Windows 7 or 8. Microsoft Word 14 is a word processor that even manages to breathe some life into Word 2013. With the new ribbon interface, it's easy to pull from a look into a quick edit. The ribbon can be moved, wrapped, or even replaced with a custom one, and though there can be customization across all the app's core features like inserting columns or tables, it still isn't the finished product. Unlike the other features on this list, which was designed specifically for professional creatives, PhotoStitch combines photo stitching with panorama stitching. However, it still takes care that the results look nice and that's exactly what you want from a photo stitching application. The best part of PhotoStich is it's exclusive hardware API. Plus, the company says it developed a way to reduce stitching errors, and it says that works faster and runs smoother than competing software.
